DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Swan Meadow School is a one story, gable-roofed, frame building, five bays long by one bay wide, on a foundation of dry laid, roughly squared stone. The facade is located on the southeast endwall, its only opening being a door with a two-light transom. Both side elevations have been altered slightly. Originally pierced by five bays of evenly spaced 4/4 sash windows, the bay closest to the facade on the northeast side has been filled in and the corresponding bay on the southwest side has been replaced by a three-light casement. The two rear bays appear to be an addition, as there is a break in the foundation and a seam in the siding at that point. The rear endwall is unfenestrated.

German siding with cornerboards sheathes the exterior walls. The roof has a tarpaper covering and two brick chimnies located near the center of its ridgeline.

A small gable-roofed, frame shed, a privy, and a water pump are also associated with the school.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The one story, gable-roofed, oblong form of this building with its gable end facade is typical of rural schoolhouses in Garrett County at the turn of the twentieth century. Some similar examples are:

G-V-A-044 Red House School
 G-V-A-117 Corunna School
 G-V-A-129 Lynndale School

Garrett County's last occupied one room schoolhouse, Swan Meadow School was a public elementary school that served the Amish community in Pleasant Valley. In the late 1950's the Garrett County Board of Education declared that the building did not meet state regulations. Rather than integrating the Amish children into regular public schools, the community built a new school with funds made available by the Board of Education. Classes were moved to the new building in 1958.¹
